This list is made up of the titles people recommended during my project and no-one suggested Tolkein that year. Her hesitation lasted no more than a second, but it was enough to bring Creed awkwardly to his feet. I agree in that Moss' writing has a comforting quality, the story is infused with magic and Irish folklore and culture, and the circle of family and friends and neighbors is a key component.

I admit at the big reveal, once the villain made the standard explanations. I love binge reading! As soon as he gets out of his restraints, he destroys the teleporter, preventing the Master Race from following.

The main character Daniell lives in Ireland with his recluse of an ex-film star. The only difference is Amelia did not really know about herself in the first book, and in this one, she's a little more "alive" I guess. You watch them make poor decision after poor decision...
