His first book, The Great Impostor was non-fiction, recounting the story of a man who posed variously as a priest, a prison warder, and a navy surgeon. No matter what his officers say about their being no wine, he refuses to give in. I just hope that my Southern Italian relatives that did not emigrate to the US did not suffer at the hands of the Nazis.

Malatesta is a haughty and careless for no one, but then makes immense sacrifices. I wanted to like the book that is sort of classified as a comedy but at the same time there are vast parts of this book that deal with the horror of war that, while realistic, really gave me a different impression on the book. The Fireflies of Autumn. Ellen Cooney.
