Kampa-Kokesch and White conceptualise executive coaching as a formal, ongoing relationship between an individual or team with managerial authority and responsibility in an organisation, and a consultant who possesses knowledge of behaviour change and organisational functioning. The coaching community is not immune to these global changes, and the development of high- quality coaching has come to be viewed as important.

This redefinition is based on recognizing the centrality of cultural and social contexts. The backgrounds of participants in the classroom provide an important reference point for meaning and relevance in instruction. Coaching is normally used for managers and executives with basic managerial and leadership skills. The Coaching Relationship Putting People First, 1st Edition Edited by Stephen Palmer and Almut McDowall. The Coaching Relationship discusses how we can integrate process perspectives such as the quality of the coach-coachee relationship, and professional perspectives including the influences of training and supervision, for more effective outcomes.
